

Hello OGN!

Why am I here?

To raise awareness about the lack of good education in universities for the web industry.

Update 2011 - Anna Debenham's talk: The digital native.

Became a web developer straight from my University degree.

Learnt more in the first month of my job than I did throughout University.

The Problem

Stop playing the blame game...

Yes, Universities are pretty archaic.

The tutors are normally teaching out of their speciality.

The web industry evolves quicker than universities can keep up.

The Solution

It's down to us...

We can offer to help the Universities.

Opera do lots for web education: The web standards curriculum.

What about alternatives?

- Mark Boulton's web design apprenticeship.

Allow students in to the community more easily.

Cheers!

Universities are improving...

If you'd like to talk more about this:

- I'll be here drinking beer for the rest of the night..
- Or find me on twitter @onishiweb
- Or my website onishiweb.co.uk